

Opinion

Culture

News

Guest Voices

(Unsplash/Glenn Carstens Peters)

by Rose Pacatte

View Author Profile

Follow on Twitter at @srrosemovies

Join the Conversation

March 16, 2020

Share on BlueskyShare on FacebookShare on TwitterEmail to a friendPrint

There is nothing like being unexpectedly homebound, as the coronavirus has done to us all.

Even if you are working remotely, the days may be shorter because others are in a working-from-home situation, too. Bored children of different ages may clamor for attention and doing something together that doesn't entail little pieces and accusations of cheating may be just the ticket to a varied and multiple intelligence approach to making this time a positive experience.

As NCR's film critic, I have created a list of edifying films we can watch together as grownups, families with children, or solo. Reluctant homeschoolers may find this helpful as part of their "curriculum." If you live alone, you might consider making a home cinema divina retreat in these days, seeing and reflecting on a film and the day's Scripture reading. With so much access to technology these days, we can benefit spiritually and as members of the human family from watching stories on the screen.

This list is sourced from my Facebook friends and my own list of favorite films that edify, inspire and sometimes challenge. They include my brief comments parenthetically. Most are available on Netflix, Hulu, Amazon Prime and other streaming services, including libraries, although some may need to be rented.

Drama

"The Shawshank Redemption" (All-time favorite for college students; friendship)

"Doctor Zhivago" (Unforgettable love story)

"Lawrence of Arabia" (Unforgettable flawed hero)

"A Lion in Winter" (Unforgettable character study of a flawed hero)

The Lord of the Rings trilogy (Extended editions!)

"Contagion" (No plot but it will teach you to wash your hands)

Questions for kids

Some questions to guide talking about movies with kids (feel free to adapt):

- What's the story about? (The younger they are, the more willing they will be to retell the story.)
- What techniques did the filmmaker use to get our attention? (Sound effects, special effects, camera angles, etc.)
- Who was your favorite character? Did that character grow and change during the movie? How?
- What did you think about ____? What would you have done in his/her place?
- How did the movie make you feel? (Then try to draw them out.)
- Were people, animals, the Earth respected in the film? What could the characters have done better?
- What did you like about the music or songs in the film?
- Is there anything in the film that bothered you? Let's talk about that.
- If the film prompts any action such as care for the Earth or acts of kindness, make a list of things to do later on.

"Midnight in Paris" (Oh, how literary)

"Green Book" (Based on a true story of a Catholic layman, it's U.S. history as you've never seen it)

"Hidden Figures" (See it for NASA, U.S. history, African American studies, women's studies and math and science class)

"The Searchers" (John Ford's classic that confronts manifest destiny, ritual, racism, misogyny in the post-Civil War era; it came out two years after Brown v. the Board of Education, a fact that enhances the film's stature in the AFI's top film list.)

"The Help" (A young white woman writes with black maids about their experiences in 1960s Jackson, Mississippi)

"Leave No Trace" (A father with post-traumatic stress disorder and his daughter find profound benevolence in a community of strangers)

"Eddie the Eagle" (The heartfelt story of the only British ski jumper to ever qualify in this Olympic event)

"Medicine Man" (What if the cure for cancer and other diseases lies in the canopy covering the ever-diminishing Amazon rainforest? Sean Connery thinks so.)

"Running on Empty" (See with teens, my friend said.)

Catholic drama

"The Mission" (Arguably the best movie about Catholicism ever made with the best score, too)

"Of Gods and Men" (My No. 1 favorite film of all time, for the moment. A community of Trappist monks discerns whether to stay or go in war-torn Algeria in the 1990s.)

"The Song of Bernadette" (No, it's not sentimental; it played a major factor in my entering the convent, along with "The Trouble with Angels," and they should be seen together for full effect.)

"A Man for All Seasons" (The film about St. Thomas More with Paul Scofield, or the Charlton Heston TV version — the actual play by Robert Bolt — if you can find it.)

"Noble" (Based on the life of Christina Noble, who rises from a harsh childhood in Ireland to make the world a better place)

"Diary of a Country Priest" and "First Reformed" (These edifying films about the inner life of a Catholic priest and a Protestant pastor respectively, decades apart by two great filmmakers, could be seen together; what conversations will be had!)

Advertisement

"The Keys of the Kingdom" (A missionary priest in China before World War II, based on a novel by Scots Catholic novelist A.J. Cronin; may this be an introduction to his works.)

"The Bells of St. Mary's" (If you get the 75th anniversary commemorative Blu-ray, I have a commentary track on it; find out how those nuns were subversive!)

"Romero" (Thirty years later, it's a classic.)

"The Exorcist" (This could be a horror film, but noted film critic Pauline Kael called it the best advertisement ever for the Catholic Church.)

"The Way" (Take a stroll on the Camino de Santiago with Martin Sheen and your life can change.)

"Where'd You Go, Bernadette?" (A woman's journey and a total surprise of a movie)

Comedies

"The Princess Bride" (It has everything: love, nobility, "As you wish," vengeance, R.O.U.S.es, and loose change.)

"Groundhog Day" (You know it's true; if you don't learn the first time you get to do it over and over and over)

(Unsplash/jeshoots.com)

"Knives Out" (A young immigrant woman gets involved in a classic murder mystery of manners in a mansion.)

"Clueless" (This very funny film is Emma for the 20th century and this year is its 25th anniversary; a new version of "Emma" is in theaters now but you can't go yet.)

"It's a Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World" (It is.)

"Steel Magnolias" (B.K. rating = bring Kleenex)

"Yours, Mine and Ours" (Based on a true story; see the original with Lucille Ball if you can)

"Crazy Rich Asians" (All our Asian nuns loved it, so just enjoy a mother learning to let go of her elegant death-grip on her precious son.)

"Ferris Bueller's Day Off" (Most appropriate, I think)

Musicals and music

"Singin' in the Rain" (Do you know what Debbie Reynolds had to go through for this role?)

"The Sound of Music" (I now watch it only for the Ländler folk dance but do you know how many nuns were inspired to enter religious life by this film? Lots.)

"Fiddler on the Roof" (Arguing with God while surviving anti-Semitism and dealing with secularization in pre-revolution Russia)

"The Greatest Showman" (Forget the critics; I loved this film where Barnum finally chooses community and family over self.)

"Bohemian Rhapsody" (Talent beyond all telling)

(Unsplash/Clement M)

Superheroes

"Wonder Woman" (Finally)

"Black Panther" (It's really about the women, and don't argue with me.)

"Ant-Man" (About a repentant anti-superhero and my favorite)

Spider-Man movies (Especially those directed by Sam Raimi)

The Dark Knight trilogy (Batman directed by Christopher Nolan; watch for the images hanging on the walls of Bruce Wayne's study then ask yourself, "Why?")

"Thor" (For no reason, but it's funny.)

Sci-fi

"Arrival" (It's all about communication)

The Matrix trilogy (The first one especially; philosophy is exciting!)

"Metropolis" (My favorite silent film that was decades ahead of its time in terms of commentary on the human person and society)

"Children of Men" (In a post-apocalyptic world, hope is born.)

"Ex Machina" (Ladies rule.)

"Gravity" (One of my all-time favorites, where West meets East and heaven meets earth)

Making movies at home

- Write a story and plan to make it into a film by making a story board for it. (Google it; there are short instruction videos on YouTube for different age groups.)
- If your computer doesn't already have a program, download open-source software and make your own movie using a smartphone; upload the file to your computer and edit it, adding in copyright-free music.
- Some kids will already know how to film and edit on their smartphones so choose a topic and make a film that shows care for the Earth, especially as Earth Day approaches on April 1.

"Another Earth" (In an act of reparation and restitution, a young woman gives up her place on a parallel earth; another favorite of mine.)

"Robot & Frank" (When his dad is diagnosed with Alzheimer's, a son buys him a robot to keep him company and watch over him and then something changes.)

Horror

"Get Out" (Learn what it feels like to be African American in the USA.)

"It" (Empathy and justice for suffering children)

"The Manchurian Candidate" (I'd go with the Frank Sinatra version.)

"The Birds" (An interesting psychological thriller and commentary on the environment)

"Bird Box" (Write a critique and be sure to describe what it's about.)

"A Quiet Place" (Listen carefully and don't make a sound; brilliant.)

Kids

"Frozen" and "Frozen 2" (No words necessary, except let it go and just let them watch these stories about two sisters who love each other.)

"Coco" (Always the right time to learn about Latino culture)

"A Little Princess" (OK, this film is older, but it'll be new to your kids.)

(Pixabay/Vidmir Raic)

"The Secret Garden" (ditto)

"The Mighty Ducks" (ditto)

"The Sandlot" (ditto)

The National Treasure franchise (Remember the monkey? She gets paid thousands, which I know because I met her and her trainer, who told me.)

"Akeelah and the Bee" (Spelling is a sport and don't let anyone tell you any differently.)

"Queen of Katwe" (Chess is a sport and, well, it just is; based on a true story.)

"Rio" and "Rio 2" (Beauty and care for the environment c/o Disney)

"The Croods" (It's more than a prehistoric coming-of-age story about a girl, it's Plato's Analogy of the Cave, the Sun and the Line, and it's amazing.)

Sports

"Bull Durham" (Baseball for grownups)

"The Perfect Game" (Baseball for kids and based on a true story)

"Field of Dreams" (It was always about you and your dad.)

"A League of Their Own" (There is no crying in baseball)

"Angels in the Outfield" (See the original with Paul Douglas and learn about angels from an interfaith perspective — there's no swearing in baseball.)

"42" (Jackie Robinson was the first black man in major league baseball and changed the game forever.)

"Moneyball" (See it for an inspiring math class.)

Documentaries

"Young@Heart" (Senior citizens cover Jimi Hendrix, Coldplay, Sonic Youth, and you'll sing, too)

"The Wrecking Crew" (Unsung session musicians from the '60s and '70s whose studio tracks made several top 100 hits; unforgettable)

"Cesar's Last Fast" (Moving documentary on the life, work and death of Cesar Chavez)

"Searching for Sugar Man" (Whatever happened to Detroit musician Sixto Rodriguez who became a star in South Africa and disappeared? Best documentary of 2012.)

[Sr. Rose Pacatte, a member of the Daughters of St. Paul, is the founding director of the Pauline Center for Media Studies in Los Angeles.]

This story appears in the Coronavirus feature series. View the full series.