Pope Francis' ongoing summit on the future of the Catholic Church, which has drawn some 450 delegates from across the globe for closely watched discussions at the Vatican, is a sign to the world that there are "very acute and very pressing" needs right now in many countries, said Cardinal Michael Czerny.

In an exclusive interview with National Catholic Reporter, Czerny said the Oct. 4-29 Synod of Bishops is "a reminder that our prayer is not dictated by what are the headlines, no matter how alarming, but by the needs of God's people, and those needs are very acute and very pressing, really, around the world."

Czerny, a synod member and the head of the Vatican's Dicastery for Promoting Integral Human Development, spoke to NCR as part of "The Vatican Briefing" podcast. He reflected mainly on Francis' moving Oct. 19 prayer vigil in St. Peter's Square for migrants and refugees.

"I was ... moved by just the feeling of gathering, the bringing together of God's people," said the Jesuit cardinal about the prayer. "This feeling that we are church, and not because we're identical, which maybe was a false concept of Catholicity in the past; not because we're identical, but because we're so different, and yet called by the one Lord to follow him and guided by the one spirit whom he promised to us."

Czerny spoke for an episode of "The Vatican Briefing" podcast that also features Susan Pascoe, a distinguished Australian church and government leader who is participating in the synod as a nonvoting expert.

Pascoe, who was also part of a group of some 30 theologians and pastoral workers who crafted the widely-praised document for the synod's continental phase, said the assembly members feel a responsibility "to keep an integrity and an authenticity" to the process, and to represent Catholics' real concerns.

"If this is going to be a process where we really allow the Holy Spirit to speak from the grassroots, then we, we have to have a process of integrity," said Pascoe, board president of the Australian Council for International Development, the chief body for Australian nongovernmental organizations involved in international development and humanitarian action.

"I think there's also an awareness that we're a privileged group here in Rome, and winning the hearts and minds of all that need to be involved — all the bishops, all the priests, all the religious, all the laypeople — it's a massive exercise," she said.

As the synod prepares to conclude at the end of this week, Pascoe, who was previously the inaugural commissioner for the Australian Charities and Not-For-Profits Commission, said her hope was that the assembly would release a final document that has "a real focus on using accessible language so that all of the people of God can take the text and make sense of it."
